The Class of 1943 of Benjamin Franklin High School

PRESENTS

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

Foreword

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.
—Longfellow—"Birds of Passage"

A tri-motored plane, a specimen of giant aircraft at its best, taxis out of a hangar onto a smooth runway, slowly lifts its nose, and begins to climb into the blue expanse of air. With the hum of the motors still resounding pleasantly, the plane is leveled off and with silver wings flashing against the sun, it glides across the sky toward the horizon like a great, graceful, beautiful bird.

Here, classmates, is the realization of a dream thousands of years old.

In the times of the Greeks, flight was the accomplishment of the birds and of the immortal gods. Because of his winged feet, Mercury was known as the messenger of the gods, and today Mercury has become the personification of all that is swift. Pegasus, the winged horse, was the means by which those who were not especially endowed with wings and who were favorites of the gods, could travel about a great deal faster and much more comfortably.

After telling and retelling the story of flight, a gift of the gods bestowed only occasionally upon man, the Greeks now inserted a new element into the picture. They began telling of an attempt by man to conquer the air. Daedalus, in order to escape from a prison in Crete, had fashioned wings of wax for himself and his son. They started out over the sea and were progressing wonderfully, until they flew so close to the sun that their wings were melted and they fell helplessly into the sea. Then other men with new ideas on flight crept into these tales—men with wings of feathers and of wood supported by air-inflated balloons.

To fly so successfully that this means of locomotion would serve man in good stead in every phase of life was a goal kept in sight by the tireless, ambitious, and faithful few throughout the years of the discoveries of new worlds and new methods of transportation on land and sea.

During those distant years, flight did not have a place of prominence in the minds of people. Yet, the dream of the conquest of the air was slowly but surely stirring and awakening the spirit of adventurous men who were confident that flight would some day play an important part in world affairs. It was a long slow process with much to discourage it, but it went on.

Steadily those pioneers of flight worked, driven on not only by the thrill of knowing that they were rendering a service to mankind—a mankind busily concerned with road building, ship building, railroad building, gold mining, coal mining, and manufacturing—but by the conviction that in conquering the air a freedom not to be had in the freest of countries would be available to all just for the flying.

So, "while their companions slept" and dreamed other dreams, these few were "toiling upward in the night" until at the beginning of the twentieth century, two brothers invented a man-driven machine that could fly. Though it left the earth only a few feet behind it, this plane not only in theory, but in fact, really flew! From then on, it was "home" all the way. Improvements improved improvements, year after year until now the "flying machine" invented by the Wright brothers has become the flying fortress of today.

But the success of flight as portrayed by the plane must be measured not alone by its economic, social, and political advantages. The plane has come to be a symbol to man—the symbol of a new freedom, a new source of inspiration, a new kind of beauty. It is the symbol of the attainment of the heretofore unattainable—the conquest of the air.

In presenting this Key, the Class of '43 salutes the pioneers of the air and the world of tomorrow to which they will give wings.

Best of everything
in the future

The spectators listened tensely throughout three thrill-packed acts. They listened with evident enjoyment to Danny Bonacci's terse characterization of hard-boiled inspector Donahue, and their eyes bulged when the murderer, Gerry Rose, was finally unmasked. The play was performed before an enthusiastic and overflowing house. "The Thirteenth Chair" was an outstanding artistic and financial success.

The Mailbag

Hello Mr. Ruby and classmates,

My brother, who had been playing in Glenn Miller's band asked Miller to see what he could do about having me transferred to Atlantic City and here I am.

The life here is about the best. We all live in hotels (two or three to a room). As soon as I arrived, I was put in the 29th A. A. F. Band with my brother.

The first thing we do in the morning (6:00) is fall out in the hall for roll call. Then we go to chow. We come back and clean up the hotel and then start on band rehearsal. In the afternoon we have another rehearsal and then march to the drill field for dress parade.

Tell the gang that this is just like a vacation except that you can't go home when you want to.

Pvt. George Escott

Liebe Schreiberin,

I don't know if there will be any sense to this letter since the serious mood I was in was completely dispelled by a display of furniture moving by a short, fat, Welsh fellow with a delightful saltwater tang to his speech; and a tall fellow who just had all his teeth pulled. They were trying to maneuver a double decker through an ordinary sized door and the Welshman had a fit of doubling-up giggles that shook him all over. The tall man was a furniture mover in civilian life and I know now why the Army got him! It was probably in the interests of sacred property. After practically removing the door and threatening to dump it out of the window, the fat little man saved the day by commandeering the situation and almost landing on his well padded posterior extremities. The only words exchanged in all this struggle were; "I thought you were a furniture-mover," and this was only when enough breath was mustered between giggles. What simple pleasures we have!

Only a few moments ago, I was knocked out of my "aux chateau d'Espagne" when the First Sergeant came through and discovered a forbidden radio on my bunk. The result is yet to be seen since I am to report tomorrow to the orderly-room for a discussion and reprimand. It seems too bad since music is the only recreation I have and it is harmless and doesn't interfere with others' pleasures. It would make more sense if the habitual drunks and noise-makers were given the disciplining instead of someone who is only trying to get as much out of life as is possible under the circumstances. Well, I have trespassed and looked for chastisement rather than forgiveness and I am ready.

As I promised you, there wouldn't be a great deal of sense to this letter but I just felt like writing to you since conversation is impossible. Believe me, when I get back, we certainly will have a great deal to discuss. I have often brought out your letters and read them through again and again. They are a constant reminder of your generosity, kindness, and thoughtfulness and no little pleasure is derived when I bring them out. I have it in mind to make a booklet of them so they won't suffer from handling and thus be read as often as I like. They are the next best thing to being at home.

Good-night, with love,

Ed
(Pfc. E. Knitter)

Hello Miss Sheehan,

How is school these days? I'm going to school again myself. It's a radio school in Missouri, where many a dot and dash sounds throughout the day. Things are slightly different in this class from Franklin High and here is why. We attend classes for seven hours a day and are taught radio work all day long—that is, if we're awake. Yes, some of us get forty winks here too.

Arnold Silver, you remember "Lady Killer Silver," and I left home the same day and we arrived in Atlantic City together for our Basic Training.

When it came to entertainment, Atlantic City was great. Dancing at the "Steel Pier" was quite all right and you might tell your class that Rochester is really in the groove when it comes to jiving, as nowhere else have I found a town where the dancers could jive half-way decent.

Things are much different and we get lonely quite often. The only things I have to look forward to is the evening mail and the hope that my pen pals write to me.

Once in a while we have a little excitement here as when the Air Force boys got here, we found that the Signal Corps fellows did not like us and every once in a while delicious arguments get under way. Then there are arguments between New York and Chicago or perhaps once a week a Civil War is revived. A southern boy said the last time, "Six of those Yankees get together and talk as fast as they can and all the time. They hear every word that is said, and I can't even get a word in edgewise."

The way I figure things I'll not get a furlough until next year but I sure hope I do get home for a little while.

I've got to try receiving fifteen words now so I'll sign off, hoping that I can always remain

Your friend,
Eddie Selzovich

Dear Mother,

I hope you didn't worry because you haven't received any letters from me for a few days. Saturday night I was put on the shipping list and from then on I couldn't write. You have probably already guessed from the heading on my envelope that I have left Atlantic City already and at last.

We were sent to Pennsylvania State College. It is a very, very beautiful school. I live in Barracks 14 which is a very beautiful and quite new fraternity house. There are four in my room; I have a closet of my own; I share a study hall and dresser with one other boy; and I have a desk all my own to use. As a matter of fact, the commanding officer told us that this is the most expensive air cadet school that the army has yet contracted. I can believe what he says because this place is really beautiful.

The length of my stay here will depend on what quintile I am put in (we're to be broken up into five groups according to our mental scores) and I doubt if I shall be in any quintile lower than the second. If I'm not in the first it will probably be because I didn't have Physics in college. Personally, I should prefer to be in the last quintile because I would like to stay here as long as I can. It's very nice here so far.

I hope that I'll get to see you all very soon. I know I'll get to see you if I ever get that little gold bar so I shall try to do my best not to disappoint you.

Please send me the newspaper clippings about the air cadets who come to Rochester because I'm interested in knowing if any of my old buddies figure in the news. Also I want you to call Herm Goldberg's home and find out his new address for me, please.

Lots and lots of love
Henry

ACTIVITIES

Editorial

Never in the history of Franklin have extracurricular activities faced so many difficulties. The war and industry have made themselves felt here, too. Many of our ablest pupils have had staggering demands made on their after-school time. Outside of the armed forces, there is no other group so burdened. Offices, factories, hospitals, and volunteer organizations have made heavy inroads into the time usually reserved for study and after-school activities, and this at a time when the leaders of our armed forces are clamoring for higher scholastic standards.

That the Franklin activities program has continued in the face of these difficulties is ample evidence of its value and vitality. In addition to retaining all the essentials of our former program, we have added many war-time activities.

The War Bond Committee, a group organized for the purpose of increasing the sale of war stamps in the school, has carried on a spirited campaign, colored with the stiff competition which inevitably ensues when attractive prizes give additional incentive to win. We Franklinites can well be proud of the fine work done by the members of this committee, and of the loyal support of the entire student body. The Morale Corps, another war-time organization, composed of the talented members of the student body, has contributed greatly to the morale of the students to "keep 'em smiling" during air raid drills. During these drills, one can walk through the corridors and hear the voices of the students ringing out in song.

Franklin has always led in musical organizations and dramatic presentations. Outstanding among the productions offered by the dramatic groups was "The Burning of the Books." The "Ballad for Americans," one of the most moving spectacles of "Ring, Freedom, Ring," the musical extravaganza produced by the city schools, was presented largely by our A Cappella Choir.

The four cardinal objectives of the National Honor Society—leadership, scholarship, character, and service—have become the goal of every ambitious student.

Exceeding our quota by over twenty per cent, we Franklin students contributed over $1,200 to the Red Cross. This drive showed what Franklin can do.

Executive Council

Daniel Bonacci, President

Luther Tarbox, Vice-President

Joan Hofferbert, Secretary

With a cross-section of the school comprising its membership, this student organization takes over and carries on the tasks and duties attached to the smooth-functioning of Franklin High School.

Successful Red Cross drives and clean-up campaigns in addition to the innumerable school problems which are brought before them for solution are a small part of the work accomplished by the Executive Council.

Winners in the Scholastic Awards Exhibition

To work creatively is one of the deepest satisfactions that man can know. At least in his youth, probably everyone is possessed of the urge to express, in some tangible form, his reaction to the world in which he lives.

In his art class, the pupil works with various media—is trained in the use of many techniques—is encouraged to observe his world and put down his interpretation in terms of the realistic or decorative forms which best represent his reactions. A definite effort is made to develop as much of the artist as may be present in the individual.

If in the course of his work his sustaining enthusiasm suggests greater possibilities in the field of Art, he is encouraged to continue with more advanced work both here and eventually in an Art school. In the past many of our pupils have thus entered one of the fields of Art as a profession; others have followed it as a minor or leisure time activity; while still others have acquired enough of a background of knowledge to derive enjoyment from an appreciation of the work of others.

The purpose of this stabilization program is not to revolutionize living standards now—this is an impossibility during war—but to maintain the differential which existed between labor and the farmer, to cite an instance, before the war.

My visit was not devoted entirely to the conference. I had some time for "extra-curricular" activities. I witnessed a session of our Congress, and I visited various buildings in Washington, such as the Pan-American Union, the Library of Congress and the Smithsonian Institute. The dele-

Current and Post-War problems have been the main topics at the recent meetings of the Inter-High Social Science Forum. At the March 23 meeting in Monroe High, Franklin was represented by Seymour Schoenick, who debated the question "Should Civilians be Drafted for War Work?" Last Thursday, April 8, at the Forum's meeting in Edison High, Donald Weinstein spoke on the topic "America Faces the Future."

Franklin's own Social Science Forum will hold a round table discussion next Tuesday on "Government Control and Relation to Business" in which Isadore Itkin, Donald Weinstein and Arthur Lapides participated.

Through the years, the Social Science Forum of Franklin has remained one of the most popular and effective of the many after-school activities.

Included in the programs of the past school year have been debates, panel discussions, and several interesting lectures. The gratifying number of Franklinites at every session indicates that our youth are well aware of their obligations as citizens of the United States. This year's officers were Morton Kenner, President; Gerald Rose, Vice-President; Eudice Tourk, Secretary.

SPORTS

Editorial

Despite the curtailment of athletics in many sections of the country, Franklin High School during the past war year continued its program of active athletic competition and physical training. Handicapped by government restrictions in small measure, the sports department maintained the high standard of high school sports to the edification of the many sports-loving students of the city.

The war has drastically altered the gymnastic program in the American high school. New exercises and new equipment were added to the gymnasium curricula to meet the demands for an extended physical fitness program. Classes composed of upper-classmen and known as Commandos were formed throughout the nation. Here the boys pursued a highly diversified conditioning program. Wrestling, long a sport renowned for its spectator appeal, was introduced into the Commando program. Boxing was also taught and practiced.

Franklin High School, always represented by a better than average team whether on the gridiron, the basketball court, or the cinder track, continued to revel in the glory of its triumphs. The boys who participated in league play as members of our teams gained invaluable lessons in sportsmanship, co-operation, loyalty, and unity, all qualities which will be of assistance to them in the greater battle now in progress as members of the greatest team in the world.

Sports, as in the past, clearly indicated their value as an impetus to finer school spirit. The spectator, cheering for his school, encounters as many difficulties as the player does, and the losses of his team are felt as keenly as are the triumphs.

The continuance of the sports program at Franklin High School has aided greatly the community as well as the students. Through the training which the boys received in athletics in high school, they will make better soldiers and better citizens.

Girls' Athletic Council

Physical fitness has never been more important nor more greatly emphasized than today, in a nation at war. To these girls go our congratulations for outstanding achievement in physical fitness and for their leadership in school activities.

The Quakers were unable to add three consecutive championships to their records during the past season, but did manage to enter the sectionals. The conclusion of the regular season found the Quakers entrenched in second place behind the champions, Monroe High. This year's basketball team showed flashes of brilliancy followed by listlessness at other times. "Ange" Furious, through his fine all-around play, was honored with an all-scholastic selection at forward.

After a disappointing start, the soccer team came through with flying colors to amass a number of victories. A record was broken by the "booters" when they won three games in one week's time.

Since the league was stronger than usual this year, the Quakers came home in fourth place, although not far behind the leaders.

Although this year's football team did not measure up to its potentialities, the team as a whole showed undaunted spirit and played its best when the chips were down. As last year, the team finished in fourth place in the league standings, but their aggressive play and fine sportsmanship earned them the praise of all who watched them.

The Ship's Log

September, 1942—After practically shivering through two months of our so-called summer vacation, doesn't it simply curdle you to think that the first day of school would dawn with blue skies and a hot sun as though Mother Nature had something to celebrate and was just torturing you by forcing you to play with the idea of a long swim in a nice cool lake. Well, as I said, the weather was fine. But the first day back wasn't all a thorny bed of roses. After all, it was good to get back and see all the kids who were and would be your kindred souls in suffering. You should have heard the whole school practically whoop with joy when they heard during the homeroom period that for the duration, our normal dismissal time would be at two o'clock because of the difficulties of transporting Franklinites to and from school on city buses.

All the usual clubs are getting under way with the usual membership just about cut in half. Honestly, with the war spreading over more of the world every day and just about all the men in the armed forces, with workers in non-essential industries going into war plants and employers in both these types of industries just howling for student labor, our extracurricular activities are just about done for. But even with the war pushing its way through the Franklin corridors in the guise of defense classes, accelerated ground-school projects, and a steady decrease in the population of both students and teachers, there are still a few things to make the true Franklinites smile. Take the recently-installed public address system for instance. It is fast becoming the last period teacher's curse. At exactly 1:55 every day a musical chime invades the studious but restless silence of the sixth period class and a voice announces to the school at large that a Junta meeting will be held immediately at the close of school and would all Junta members please attend. The announcement isn't funny, but take a look at Teacher who is visibly struggling between her natural love for science and her time-saving instincts.

October, 1942—Victory slogan of the month: "Victory will be in sight, if we co-operate, work, and fight" is the first of the ten best victory slogans selected by the Franklin Victory Slogan Committee.

Did you ever see a boy trying to look at least about half alive and succeeding to the extent that he looks a little more than half dead? Then you look closely and notice the hobble about the legs and black bags where his eyes ought to be and you become convinced that he is. Well, this Zombie drooling with fatigue is the result of the new commando course designed to make "men" out of fun-loving male Franklinites. The girls are by no means exempt from this physical fitness war-time measure, but, being women, the course is only half as strenuous; therefore the results are only half as disastrous.

The football season started off with a BANG—for the Jefferson team! The score was Jefferson 14 and Franklin 2.

Because the sale of war bonds and stamps wasn't what it should be, a War Bond Committee was organized which greatly increased the sales through the stimulus of competition.

Dismissal air raid drills are being planned for Franklin and an Air Raid Morale Committee was inaugurated to provide entertainment to the students for the periodic school drills.

You know, something very peculiar is happening to this school. The cafeteria was never messier, the tempers of various teachers are becoming increasingly brittle, the fiendish instincts of students have become conspicuously evident, and even the most sweet-tempered have not even a kind word to bestow upon an intimate friend. Can it be the war? Is it income tax worry? A committee is investigating this strange phenomenon at this very moment.

November, 1942—A really solid Senior Play has been slated for December 4. They say it's really a dilly and is

*Don't miss it!
Ray, Burke*

thrill-packed with murder and suspense. The play is entitled "The Thirteenth Chair."

The annual Variety Show was held as the climax for the annual Memorial Scholarship Fund Drive and I must say it was an overwhelming success financially. Ziggy Allen's orchestra was really super, and it is commonly thought that he is the nearest thing to Harry James in Franklin High.

Outside of this, nothing really exciting is happening and everyone is feverishly awaiting the long Thanksgiving Day week-end, which will provide a short respite from school.

There are no new developments on the committee investigating the reasons for the present conduct of the school as a whole. One member of the committee vehemently declares it is the work of a mischievous germ.

December, 1942—The morons have invaded Franklin! Small groups have been congregating and exchanging supplies of "moron stories." You can't escape them—they're in the lunchrooms, in classrooms, and around lockers overshadowing the triumph of the Senior Play and the sensation of the Christmas issue of the Courant, which appeared all in green, in true holiday spirit.

Some of the moron stories that have been floating around are "Have you heard about the intellectual moron who moved to the city because he heard that the country was at war? Have you heard about the moron who took a ruler to bed with him to see how long he slept? Or have you heard about the moron who took his nose apart to see how it ran? Did you hear about the moron who cut off his hand so he could write shorthand? Did you hear about the dying moron who went into the living room? Have you heard about the moron who put his father in the refrigerator because he wanted cold pop?" And thus passed December.

January, 1943—Everyone is back at school recuperating from Christmas work in various stores and offices in the city and resolving solemnly that he will do his homework faithfully every night and will no longer resort to copying his math or chemistry from a diligent friend. Well, I still agree with whoever said "The best laid plans of mice and men gang oft a-gley."

The time has come when all Franklinites will elect their Student Association officers for the term. Lillian Leto and Daniel Bonacci vie for the presidency while Mitchell Steklof and Luther Tarbox have been nominated for the office of vice-president, and Mildred Tausch and Joan Hofferbert complete the ballot as candidates for secretary.

The Victory Corps staff has been appointed by the Executive Council with Mr. Carl Chamberlain as faculty sponsor of the corps assisted by other members of the faculty. Franklin's first project related to the United States Schools at War program and the Victory Corps was the making of a scrap-book which described through pictures, graphs, cartoons, and writing, Franklin High's war effort. The book, under the guidance of Mr. Ruby, will become a part of the State and National School at War exhibits.

It seems as though the seniors in this school aren't satisfied with the story-book Cinderella, so they chose one of their own and decked her out in a story-book grandeur. The play was featured at the Senior Dance and a few of the senior boys were certainly super in the roles of the fair Cindy, the wicked stepmother, and the evil sisters—when their voices stayed up where they belonged and didn't drop to a deep bass without a ten-day notice. But no kidding, it was a simply marvy idea and all the seniors present really liked it.

February, 1943—All of us went to a very impressive National Honor Society Induction Wednesday. For the first time in the history of our school the whole slate of new members for the year were inducted together in one grand ceremony. Ever since we were in the eighth grade and had witnessed this grand spectacle for the first time, we had looked forward to the day when we would walk proudly up onto the platform and light our candle from the torch of knowledge and walk still more proudly to our places, confident that we should carry on the ideals of the society. Want to know something? Quite a few of us have had that dream come true.

Everything seems to be going haywire today. Key orders were scheduled to be taken in three days; yet for some unknown reason homeroom periods were shortened and the result is that all orders weren't taken and everyone is besieging the advisers and editors with countless requests for more orders. I honestly think that there is some invisible force working to undermine Franklin morale—and after listening to what some members of that committee I told you about discovered, I'm almost sure of it, almost. More later.

At last it seems as though every Frankinite is pitching in helping to win the war. The Library Aides held a dance to collect magazines and books for the armed forces. Many of our benevolent juniors and seniors spent tireless hours at the rationing depots issuing thousands of the second War Ration Books. You know, I think grown-ups are beginning to realize that high school kids aren't as young and foolish as they're made out to be. Hurray for our side!

March, 1943—For the second time "Ring, Freedom, Ring!" amazed thousands of city dwellers by its masterpiece of co-operation and talent. Imagine finding a combination like that in the city schools!

If you see a student picking up some scrap from the floor with no teacher aiming a submachine gun at him, if you happen to notice a teacher not reprimanding a scoundrel for his misdemeanors, if you see a teacher tearing out his rapidly-thinning hair by the roots for fear that his star pupil might have forgotten to prepare his oral topic, please don't jump to the obvious conclusions—it's only the Evaluation Committee whose evaluating tendencies have disrupted the usual order of the school.

At just about this time, the campaign chairman of the War Bond Committee has announced that the sale of stamps in the homerooms up-to-date has exceeded the five-thousand-dollar mark. The Red Cross Committee also declares that contributions from the school totaled over one thousand dollars, the highest goal ever achieved in the history of Franklin! Say, we broke quite a few records this year, didn't we?

April, 1943—Students eager to wear a couple of bars on their shoulders or stripes on their sleeves took the Army and Navy exams. At the time we're writing this log, final results have not been tabulated, but we're keeping our fingers crossed for you Franklin fellows.

Beautiful bronze-colored statues were awarded to the homerooms having the highest war stamp sales.

The senior ranks are fast becoming depleted by Army and Navy demands upon them. In other words, there's a knock at the door and it isn't opportunity.

Many boys in uniform are seen strolling through the corridors daily, as Franklin sons in the service come back to say "Hello."

Even though it's snowing outdoors, remember, this is spring; start planning your Victory garden now.

Nothing else exciting is happening right now except the question regarding the place where the senior banquet is to be held.

May, 1943—Well, whadd'ya know! After two weeks of indecision and debating to say the least, we find that the banquet is going to be held right here at school! After such a session we expected more dramatic results, although school is the only place that satisfies anyone.

Have you observed those sharp little frosh caps that are bedecking the heads of illustrious seniors and which serve as a means of identifying them. Well, if you ask me, seniors don't need any identification; the proud swagger and the reckless gleam in their eyes will distinguish them from the crowd on any day of the week.

At last we know why! The committee has submitted its full report and we are happy to inform you that we students aren't bad at all; we're really angels in fact! As for teachers, why they're the most lovable people on earth—so gentle and sweet-tempered. So if the school seems to be rather topsy-turvy mentally and physically, we can blame this situation on something that is neither animal, vegetable, nor mineral, a sort of school gremlin called by eminent bacteriologists, the BREWINS, a fifth cousin to the English gremlin.

Now that we've got that off our chest, isn't it comforting to know that when we've studied our assignment and just don't remember it in class, some devilish little imp has erased all knowledge from our minds. And when a teacher sends an innocent pupil to the office because he was a tenth of a second late, you'll know that a Brewin has captured her soul and the benighted creature must do its bidding.

So if you're school-minded you will undoubtedly see these elfin plagues and if you are a true Frankinite you will unhesitatingly exterminate them with the Anti-Brewin spray sold daily at the Bookstore.

Today we are on the threshold of the last all-participating school event—FRANKLIN DAY. Each year sometime during the month of May all the personnel, both students and teachers, lay aside their books and let themselves go for an afternoon and evening of just plain fun in celebration of Franklin High School's anniversary. The corridors are echoing with the hustle and bustle that ensues with the formation of numerous committees and the rehearsals for the traditional evening play. So, guys and gals, grab yourselves a hunk of stuff and get hep—trot out with your pals and have some fun!

Just one more page remains! After that page has been filled with entries on the Senior Banquet, examination week, and finally, Commencement exercises, the book must be closed. Then, the Class of '43 will take flight and try the wings which have supposedly been strengthened through years of learning the ground work which must come before the solo flight.

Good Luck. Happy Landing!
